Description	The attribution of the high-quality portrait, formerly assigned to Titian, has not yet been conclusively clarified. After publication of the monograph by Gianni Carlo Sciolla ( I Piazza da Lodi. Una tradizione di pittori nel Cinquecento , edited by Gianni Carlo Sciolla, Cat. Lodi, Milan: 1989), Mauro Natale remains with Piazza.

Provenance category	B – The provenance from 1933 to 1945 has not been unambiguously clarified; gaps in the ownership history remain. According to current research, there is no evidence of Nazi-looted art. There are no implications of Nazi-looted art and / or conspicuous circumstances.
About the provenance	The portrait of a gentleman was donated to the collection of the Kunsthaus Zürich in 1956 by Emil Bührle, who had acquired it in 1941 from Galerie Wildenstein in Paris as a work by Titian. When he imported it into Switzerland, Bührle failed to declare it to the clearing office, which caused him trouble with the authorities. The dispute was settled, with Bührle being required to contribute 40'000 francs to the Kunstgesellschaft for the purchase of Paul Cézanne's painting «La Montagne Sainte-Victoire». The portrait originally came from the collection of the Wilberforce family in the UK, and was auctioned at Christie's in 1939. It has not yet been ascertained how long it was in the family's possession. It is likely that Reginald Garton Wilberforce owned the collection, and that it was bequeathed when he died in 1914. The Wilberforce family are not known to have been subject to persecution. There are gaps in its provenance, but no suspicion that it was confiscated as a result of Nazi persecution.
